Overview :

Creativity

What is it? Can we be creative? Do we think we are? Can we make it sustainable?

Teachers are always full of energy and seem to have everything under control.

This talk will give us a near approach to keep us being creative for our job purpose, to help us find alternatives in teaching and save time

BIODATA – Michèle Rankin- Shelly

Since the late 80's at the chalkface, with a handful of teaching qualifications, lots of conferences, one eye always on what's new, Shelly is now more aware than ever for the need to constantly change with the times. She has been privileged to have worked with and learnt from innovative teachers, and great students and is keen to find ways of connecting better with pupils.

Overview

Low prep tricks & tweaks for more effective learning.

Due to the fast ever-changing times we're living in, our students attitudes to learning English, a slow process, are challenging or at least befuddled, as we, they're, used to immediate answers and solutions. This is coupled with an overexposure to too much information which can lead to being less satisfied and attentive.

Here we'll look at a few zero/low prep DOABLE activities out, which she has found help pupils "change their chip" so they're more receptive. They're discipline-friendly, & empowering Underlying these activities is how essential it is to be present, have high expectations, & create a positive class atmosphere. It's the tweaks which make the magic in class. If we're authentic, empathic we'll get it back. BELIEVE.

BIODATA- David Judge

has been teaching English since 2001. After eight years in Asia, he relocated to Spain. He is particularly interested in using the imagination and creativity of his students to get them interacting, speaking and engaging with each other in English

Overview :

Getting Older Primary Students to Play with the Language

Harnessing young learners' energy can be challenging. The speaker will share ideas, activities and strategies that he's used to capture his students' interest and imagination by letting them play with the language whilst simultaneously pushing them to be both creative and accurate, helping older primary students develop their skills and confidence.
